

Many states are cracking down on pop-up parties and other unauthorized large gatherings. They are considered illegal and usually result in public drinking, vandalism, drug use, and fights. This is especially true in summer months, and in places popular with the public. Places like parks, bridges, plazas, and pedestrian areas are common targets of these gatherings. They typically take place late at night and grow quickly with the power of social media to promote them.

Often, public safety officials do not know such gatherings are happening until the crowds have become large and criminal activity occurs. With limited staff and resources, these sorts of gatherings are an increasing challenge to law enforcement. The response from many agencies is to close the areas entirely.
