

Unauthorized large gatherings, including those quickly organized through social media, present growing public safety risks. Often illegal, these events are linked to vandalism, drug use, and violence, and tend to form with little warning in popular public areas like parks and plazas, especially during summer months.

For emergency preparedness teams, the challenge is significant. Events often go undetected until crowds have formed and criminal activity begins. Limited resources make effective response difficult, and many agencies are forced to close affected areas entirely.

Improving early detection, situational awareness, and coordinated response is critical to keeping public spaces safe and accessible.
